would give some flexibility there and also create some administrative problems for the Welfare Department. I would hope we would vote against this amendment.

PRESIDENT: Are you ready for the question? Senator Fowler.

SENATOR FOWLER: Well if I understood what Senator Dworak was saying, he was saying that this would allow a woman to choose her own place of residence. That seems perfectly alright with me and I don't know what administrative problems that would create for the Welfare Department to do so. I was wondering if Senator Dworak could be more specific as to what is the administrative problem in having a woman choose her place of residence, or have her place of residence be the place she lives, as opposed to where her husband lives? That seemed a very vague discription of the problem.

SENATOR DWORAK: Is that a question?

SENATOR FOWLER: Yes.

SENATOR DWORAK: Well if a woman lives in county A and the husband lives in county B, and the woman could establish her residency actually where she lives, or she could establish a residency by virtue of where her husband lives, it would be her choice and it would no longer be where she lives. She lives in A, in all probability, I think we should say that's then where she should establish her residency. I think we should make it absolute as to give her the option whether she wants to establish her residency where she actually lives or establish her residency as a result of where her husband lives.

SENATOR FOWLER: Mr. Speaker, members of the Legislature, if I understand Senator Cavanaugh's motion that's exactly what it does. It says that a womans residence should be where she lives and not where her husband lives. There has been cases of husband and wife who are seperated, the woman is in another county, she's not allowed to vote in that county because her husband is a resident elsewhere. Her residency is dependent upon her husband. It seems that the Cavanaugh amendment brings it up so that wherever a person lives, that's her residency. That seems to me to be what the Welfare Department would want.

PRESIDENT: Senator Cavanaugh.

SENATOR CAVANAUGH: I have a brief closing. Are we to closing?

PRESIDENT: Yes, we're to closing.

SENATOR CAVANAUGH: Alright. Well Senator Fowler explained it and I don't understand the Welfare Departments problem at all, unless they don't understand common law. Residency is where a person lives. Now with women we've treated them different and said that their residency is where their husband lives. They may not live together for years, as very often happens, particularly in welfare situations. This memo would simply say that a womens residency is where she lives. If she doesn't live with her husband she can't claim her residency with her husband. She has to claim her residency where she lives. There just isn't any other reasonable way to treat women, unless you want to treat
